The published report of population of the cities and towns in Missouri places the population of Potosi at 638. In 1890 it was 599, which would indicate that the town had only increased 39 in number of inhabitants in the past ten years. This looks small. but since the census of 1800 the limits of the town have been restricted and thus the enumeration of 1900 does not include as much territory as that of 1890 did. Taking in all the district of what is practically included in the town of Potosi, the gain would be at least one hundred larger than the fig- try their fortunes in Oklahoma. ures indicate.
